Despite this, subgroup analyses were performed to assess the effect of the disease category, treatment modality, and KPS score on the relationship between the two groups, which enabled us to identify the main variable responsible for the observed differences. According to the results of the present study, it was found that overall response rate was lower in the patients with R/M HNSCC than in those with primary HNSCC. It can be said that OS was longer in patients with primary HNSCC, which can be attributed to the better performance status and other characteristics of these patients. Although the difference in the response rates was not found to be statistically significant, we believe that, due to the relatively small number of patients in each group, such a difference may be difficult to detect with certainty. We think that the results of the subgroup analysis support the notion that the difference in the response rate is not due to differences in the characteristics of the patients with R/M HNSCC. However, further well-designed studies with a larger patient population are warranted to support the findings of the present study. In the present study, there was no significant difference in OS between the two groups. The results of the present study may be attributed to the relatively small number of patients in each group. In addition, the survival rate in the group with R/M HNSCC was evaluated retrospectively. Although the sample size was calculated to obtain a power of 80%, there was a probability of 2×10^{-8}

Induction of NF-kappa B and AP-1 expression by lipopolysaccharides in human cervical carcinoma HeLa cells. Both the nuclear factor-kappa B (NF-kappa B) and activator protein-1 (AP-1) transcription factors are involved in the regulation of the expression of various genes and have been implicated in the pathogenesis of cancer. However, the effect of lipopolysaccharide (LPS) on the activation of NF-kappa B and AP-1 and its implication in cancer has not been investigated previously. Using the HeLa human cervical carcinoma cell line as a model of human LPS-responsive cells, we studied the effect of LPS on the expression of the NF-kappa B and AP-1 transcription factors and the effect of the overexpression of these factors on the expression of LPS-induced genes. We observed that HeLa cells treated with LPS exhibit induction of NF-kappa B and AP-1 binding to the DNA and of AP-1-dependent gene expression. A similar effect is observed on the level of NF-kappa B and AP-1-dependent gene expression in HeLa cells stably overexpressing p65 and c-Jun. Using antibodies specific for I-kappa B alpha, we demonstrated that the nuclear factor of kappa B p65 subunit is localized in the cytoplasm in HeLa cells. Moreover, after LPS treatment, the nuclear level of p65 is rapidly recruited to the nucleus. These results indicate that the NF-kappa B and AP-1 transcription factors are activated by LPS in HeLa cells and that the overexpression of these factors results in increased expression of LPS-induced genes.
