This invention relates to a method and apparatus for selectively exercising the muscles of a human being. More particularly, it relates to a novel method of stimulating and exercising the muscles of the feet and hands of a user and maintaining the exercise for as long as necessary. Heretofore, the conventional approach to foot exercise has been to wrap the feet with bunches of lead foil. Such a procedure is intended to heat the feet. However, the tin oxide on the lead foil creates a galvanic current between the feet and hands. This is harmful to the cardiac muscle of the body and should be avoided. Also, such lead foil cannot be used to exercise the foot muscles because the lead imparts a weight to the foot muscles which is undesirable. The prevalence of childhood obesity is increasing, particularly in middle childhood and among racial and ethnic minorities. Obesity in adults has also increased, and is associated with serious health consequences. As children age they need to spend more time sitting, and many children are now obese or overweight. Thus
